

Sexual Harassment Of Women In Christianity

Posted on October 15, 2019

Introduction

It has been quite disturbing to read and hear the stable tapping of new accusations of sexual harassment among women and other suitable activities by the public front-runners and other influential people in the country. An insignificant undulation has become a tidal movement of rumours, inundating even the most influential who have endured a flash at repute for quite some time. What new time is the attention being placed on the women's stories of sexual harassment? It is the one item to read the measurement that more than 40 per cent of American women have reported devouring qualified sexual harassment. It is an additional thing to hear the tales of several of the activities that women have had to tolerate.

These tales are absolutely horrible. As Christians, they are ethically shameful. It will be extremely challenging to imagine how people could act like this in Christianity, though these behaviours and cases have been reported in the past quite some time. God is in the corporate revolution. He wanted to renovate our lives into the resemblance of Jesus Christ. And also wants to renovate the principles from the leavening command of the Holy Spirit articulated in the lives of followers who infiltrate the civilization similar to the yeast in the dough. That revolution is the internal alteration formed by the Holy Spirit. The main discussion has tumbled around the sexual harassment and abuse that has commanded billions of women to speak out about their involvements and started challenging the alteration in their businesses. Now, the involvement has grasped a new community, 'Christianity'.

Women are equivalent to men as all of them are the blood of Adam (both men and women). But women are not equivalent to men in power and strength and also in numerous other characteristics. Women were intended to be more fragile than men so that they could want, as manhood requires, God. Considering women are substandard to men doesn't make any sense and doesn't decrease their honour. But as the scriptures tell us to give integrity to women as the frailer receptacles God intended them to be. Similarly, the characters of women in Christianity can differ significantly today as they have been wide-ranging traditionally since the third century New Testament Church. This is particularly correct in weddings and in prescribed ministry situations in several Christian values, churches, and parachurch organizations. Christian civilizations that publicly distinguish saints as persons of the extraordinary sanctity of life do list women in that collection. Utmost protuberant is Mary, the mother of Jesus, who is extremely respected all through Christianity, predominantly in Roman Catholicism, where she is measured as the "Mother of God". (Fortune, 1991)

Understandably, any sexual activity in the place of work with somebody who is not your partner is prohibited by a Christian demanding to principle God. Away from the sexual constituent, research designates that sexual harassment is a reduced amount of sex and more about supremacy. Sexualized witticisms and insinuations preserve a place of work where men are more relaxed even if women aren't. The physical attack reveals that one person has supremacy over another. Such resources for handling the supremacy are entirely unpredictable with Jesus's education. Matthew 20 defines Jesus' followers as quarrelling about their position in his new realm. His answer emphasizes retreating from the supremacy that they knew. He clarified, "You know that the rulers of the Gentiles lord it over them, and their high officials exercise authority over them. Not so with you. Instead, whoever wants to become great among you must be your servant." In addition to the sexual positions that are out of bounds, harassment comes from an interpretation of supremacy that is exclusively non-Christian.

The principle of the matter is assertiveness that one person is valued less than the other. The harasser, deliberately or accidentally, ideals him or her more than the aim of harassment. If the subject is an intimidating grind setting where sexualized witticisms and belittling remarks flourish, the harasser's supposition is that his or her pleasurable is essential to the personhood of others. If the matter is extra critical where the harasser types a work deal or advertising depending on receiving sexual nepotisms in arrival, the harasser considers that his or her satisfaction is far more significant than the mortality of the women. Mutually, they are at odds with the Scriptural assessment that men and women are formed in the appearance of God.

Christian Churches are one of the biggest victims of these sexual harassment cases nowadays. Christianity doesn't allow people to do these things in Churches, but there are foul-minded people living in each and every society who are not afraid of God. However, women have faith that their churches must be places of security rather than insecurity. Research released this year demonstrates that ordained priests frequently have a deficiency of information to discourse ferocity in their communities among women. In a survey by the Christian research firm, it has been reported that Protestant priests how answered to the internal ferocity and almost half of the priests (47%) supposed they did not know if anyone in their church had been a casualty of sexual harassment. The majority of the priests (87%) believed that the women suffering from sexual harassment would find their church should be a "safe harbour", but only a limited number of the priests (52%) said they had a strategy to support sufferers of the sexual harassment. (U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, n.d.)

When it comes to Jesus Christ, it initiates to see the thorough character of women given in a new life. From the woman at the well to the one who was trapped in the act of betrayal, Jesus exhibited affection, consideration, empathy, and clemency when washing Mary's feet. Definitely, both genders have received his kindness, curative, and luxury similar to each other. Despite existing in the punishing male-controlled civilization of His day, through the workings and disputes of the Son of God, a notion that each and every person is equal in His and Father's eyes. Christians can take to battle sexism and its equivalent types of ferocity. Christian Church can be defined as a place where both men and women can be themselves and can be recognized as people made in the image of God.

Enlistment, group, and obligation are extremely compulsory constituents to fight sexual harassment and all of its forms. But most significantly, need for prayers and study of God's Terms to pursue and understand participation in these essential problems.

People of God want to be in the lead of contravening the misconception of male sovereignty and female weakness. The past records have not been as much satisfying as it was intended and similarly, the Church is not playing the role as God has called it to be. It can prepare that by lighting the Scriptural posture and carrying curative and refurbishment to those who have been wrecked and dispossessed and thus reiterate the affection and dedication to Jesus Christ.

Women of all beliefs, races, philosophies, and circumstances are courageously breaking their quietness. Yet numerous societies of trust cannot equal courage with accomplishment. In spite, of sensing the issue is too universal, they have accepted it, parting entire churches and societies paralyzed.

References

U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. (n.d.). Harassment.

<https://www.eeoc.gov/harassment>

Fortune, M. M. (1991). Sexual violence: The sin revisited. Pilgrim Press.

<https://www.worldcat.org/title/sexual-violence-the-sin-revisited/oclc/22345938>